The Colour Chart Project

이 프로젝트에서 팅-팅 쳉은 런던의 아시아 매장에서 발견한음식 재료들을 (정치적 의미를 지닌 색상들을) 배경으로 촬영했다. 여기서 오브제들은 '서양'의 맥락에서 상대적으로 "이상한(weird)" 또는 "신비한(mystical)"것 으로 간주된다. 그들의 모순되는 기원과 목적지는 이민자로서의 그들의 지위를나타낸다. 작가는 중간(in-between)의 상태, 즉 서양과 동양의혼합을 만들어, 아시아성(Asianness) 이라는 만들어진 개념을문제시하며, 색상 차트로 자의적인 이름들을 사용하여 "규범"에대한 정의에 의문을 제기하고, 또한 오늘날 이러한 런던의 식량 수입을 이민과 식민화의 역사와 병치시켜나간다.

The Colour Chart Project

In this project Ting-Ting Cheng took photographs of food ingredients found in Asian restaurants in London against a background of colors with political connotations.

The objects are regarded as being relatively "weird" or "mystical" in a Western context. Their contradictory origins and destinations refer to their status as immigrants. The artist raises a problem pertaining to the fabricated concept of "Asianness" by generating an in-between state, that is, a mixture of the East and the West. She presents a juxtaposition of London's import of food materials with the history of immigration and colonization.

새우등 터지기

The back of the shrimp that cries

The back of the shrimp that cries was inspired by a personal story of the artist's mother. Cheng created two fictional characters, Tin-Tin, who travelled to Seoul in order to find the Korean man of her mother's romantic past in the 70's, and Christina, an Asian American who moved to Seoul in order to find her 'root'. By following their journeys, the project explores the historical and current national relationship between Taiwan and South Korea as well as the concept of race, nationhood, and colonial history. at cries was inspired by a personal story of the artist's mother.
